(1) This all happened about fifteen years ago, when my parents were talking about their plans for our summer vacation. My mother wanted to spend a week on a sunny beach somewhere on the Spanish coast, but my father said that he (2A) there already. Now that was the first my mother had ever
5 heard of that, and (3) she asked rather sarcastically when that might have been and whether he had been alone. Of course, being small, I didn't really understand why my father seemed lost for words for a moment, but young as I (2B), I could sense his embarrassment.

It turned out that he had spent a week in Spain as a student, several years
10 before he and my mother had even met. But (4) that didn't prevent him from still feeling reluctant about admitting that the group he had been a member of had included three girls. Nor did it stop my mother showing all the signs of a jealous wife. It is still clear in my memory that she said nothing to my father for the rest of the day, and over the next few days she spoke to him only when
15 she needed to. Even now, fifteen years after that *tiff, when she (2C) upset at something my father has said or done, she will suddenly say, "You never did tell me what you were up to in Spain that time."

I suppose I'll get married sometime in the future. I don't want to keep any secrets from the person I get married to, but then on the other hand I don't see 20 why I should discuss things that have nothing to do with our relationship. Wouldn't you agree?

(注) tiff: いざこざ
